If you've ever worked with Photoshop, you'll probably find it difficult to draw or select curves (Curved Path). Normally, users will choose Pen Tool - an extremely difficult tool to use even after years of use.

Now Adobe has come up with a better solution in the Photoshop update.

Today, Adobe shares a feature video called the Curvature Pen Tool. Instead of using the traditional Pen Tool anchor point, this tool will create an automatic curve. Let's take a look at the video below of Pen Tool.

The new tool looks a lot more intuitive. The curves are automatically created with just one click and you can create corners easily by double clicking the mouse. It also allows making sharp or circular edits by clicking on the anchor point. Adobe is gradually reducing its reliance on keyboard shortcuts.

This new feature will be available later this year on the next version of Photoshop CC.
