

Review the strange and confusing game ads in history

Many game studios have created very quirky TV commercials to impress viewers. In it, there are many unique promotional content that even though it is decades old, it still makes gamers unforgettable.

A Link to the Past, action-adventure game published by Nintendo for the SNES, flashmob version (1991).

'MORTAL KOMBAT!' (1993), a fighting game in the popular Mortal Kombat series, developed by Midway.

Sonic R, the racing game that scares players (1997)

Majora's Mask (2000)

Super Mario Sunshine, one of the best titles in the Mario series (2002)

Playing GameCube in... toilet (2002)

The mouse can't escape Nintendo's temptation (2005)

PS3 Baby is here (2006)

Xbox's globe seems to be saying something to all gamers (2001)

It is thanks to these unusual advertisements that today gaming has become an extremely developed and profitable industry. It is expected that the game industry in 2023 will reach $ 384.9 billion in revenue,

Those who have seen one of the game ads above must be from the 7x, 8x generation. Have you seen the unique game ads above and which one impressed you the most? Please share with everyone in the comments section at the end of the article.

You finished reading the article "Review the strange and confusing game ads in history" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

---