

Samsung copies Apple's 'successful' product again

Samsung continues its return to the desktop market with the release of the 27-inch All-in-One Pro that looks a lot like Apple's iMac.

Samsung continues its return to the desktop market with the release of the 27-inch All-in-One Pro that looks a lot like Apple's iMac.

This sleek new Samsung computer boasts a number of attractive features that follow the success of its previous 24-inch desktop model. More importantly, the design of the product is not unfamiliar to users as it is based on the iMac - one of the extremely successful AIO computers.

The Samsung All-in-One Pro has a design that looks quite similar to the iMac.

The Samsung All-in-One Pro has an ultra-slim 6.5mm metal frame for a minimalist aesthetic. The company also includes a wireless keyboard and mouse with similar designs to maintain a seamless visual experience. The computer's display is a spacious 27 inches, offering 4K resolution.

In terms of sound quality, the new Samsung All-In-One Pro PC features 3D speakers that support Dolby Atmos technology. Inside, the PC packs an Intel Core Ultra CPU, although the company hasn't specified the specific model of the processor. Furthermore, the RAM and SSD capacities are also not detailed, but the base configuration can offer at least 16GB of RAM and 256GB of SSD.

Full-size keyboard and mouse included with the product.

The All-in-One Pro offers basic physical connections with an HDMI port, a couple of USB-A ports, an Ethernet port, and a standard headphone jack. Wireless connectivity options include Bluetooth 5.3 and Wi-Fi 6E. It has a built-in webcam for essential video conferencing needs.

As expected, Samsung leverages the Galaxy ecosystem in the All-in-One Pro. It comes pre-installed with Windows 11 Home, including apps like Buds Auto Switch, Multi Control, Quick Share, and Second Screen for seamless file transfer and screen mirroring with Galaxy phones and tablets.

Additionally, the Windows Phone Link app also allows users to conveniently manage phone notifications and respond from their PC.

The product's selling price is around 36.72 million VND.

In terms of price, the 27-inch All-In-One Pro is priced at 1.99 million won, or about $1,500. It is currently available for pre-order in South Korea with an official release date of April 22. Samsung has not yet announced plans to release the new All-In-One Pro PC to other markets.
