

Samsung Galaxy F folding phone has a release date and price, very chat!

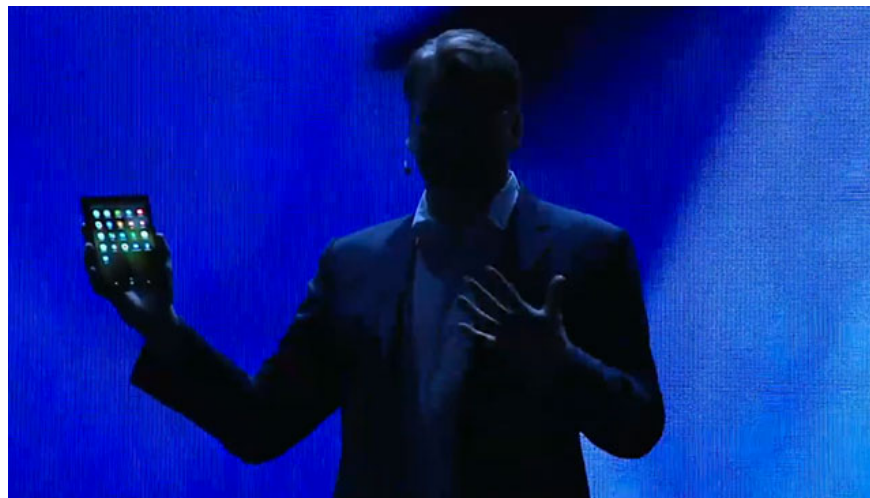

Yonhap News reported that Samsung's Galaxy F will be launched in March 2019, one million units will be prepared to be delivered to users in this first batch.

Yonhap News reported that Samsung's Galaxy F will be launched in March 2019, one million units will be prepared to be delivered to users in this first batch.

According to Yonhap sources, the Galaxy S10 will be revealed in detail in February 2019, a month later the 5G version, released at the same time as the introduction of the Galaxy F-fold phone.

Rumors of the Galaxy F release date came after Koh Dong Jin, Samsung's chairman, said that the Korean phone maker will launch a phone that folds in the first half of 2019.

The Galaxy F prototype was unveiled at the event for developers of Samsung Developer Conference 2018 Open Keynote but still managed to hide the real design by turning off the light. According to the stage demo, the device looks like a tablet, has a 7.4-inch main screen and folds into a candy bar with a 4.6-inch secondary screen.

'Although the price of the phone has not been decided yet, observers said it will cost about 2 million won (US $ 1770),' Yonhap said.

Samsung Galaxy F uses the Infinity Flex folding screen, candy bar screen that allows all applications that other devices cannot.

As revealed at the Samsung Developer Conference, Galaxy F has a compatible application to ensure the application running on the external screen will still work on the main screen.

The phone also uses Samsung's new user interface called One UI, with rounded icons, allowing Android users to focus on 'really important things'.

According to the official One UI site, the new user interface is still in beta. Users will experience this interface when using Galaxy S9, S9 Plus and Note 9 before they are officially released in January 2019.
