

Samsung officially confirmed that there will be Galaxy X folded

If you remember, Samsung once mentioned a phone that folded last year and made many fans look forward to this year's CES event press conference.

The fact that Samsung is creating a folding smartphone and plans to launch in 2018 is not news. But now they are officially confirmed. If you remember, Samsung once mentioned a phone that folded last year and made many fans look forward to this year's CES event press conference.

'It is true that we are developing folding smartphones. However, we cannot confirm the production schedule or the release schedule of these phones because this is a business strategy,' Samsung representative said.

Talking about the launch date, Koh, Samsung's mobile director, said it was still early to decide.

'It's hard to talk about the release date at this time. We want to reveal the products at a reasonable time, but now it's a bit early,' DJ Koh said.

The phones that fold Galaxy X and Surface Phone make fans look forward to it

Although this is Samsung's official statement at CES, there are probably many mysteries that we do not know. Is Android ready to support folding screens? Android has not been able to adapt to the different screen sizes yet, and if you think that Galaxy X runs well on both mobile and tablet, then perhaps someone will be suspicious of the interface errors.

Hopefully Samsung can overcome and still hope to meet Galaxy X this year.

See more:

1. Microsoft confirmed it will have a Surface Phone
2. Future phones will have screens on both the front and back
3. Microsoft explains why folding phones will be the next big innovation of technology

You finished reading the article "Samsung officially confirmed that there will be Galaxy X folded" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.