

Samsung unveiled two Series 7 Chronos laptops

Ahead of the IFA Trade Fair 2011, Samsung has unveiled new high-end Series 7 Chronos laptops.

Ahead of the IFA Trade Fair 2011, Samsung has unveiled new high-speed Series 7 Chronos laptops ("Chronos" meaning "time").

One of two Samsung Series 7 Chronos models. (Source: techradar.com)

In particular, the Chronos 700Z5A model is more advanced, with an Intel Core i7 Quad-Core processor, with a 15.6-inch screen.

And the Chronos model "700Z4A" is more popular with Intel Huron River Core i5 2467M processor, with 14-inch screen.

Both laptop versions of Windows 7 Home Premium operating system have Express Cache technology that allows using 8GB of flash memory to expand on the motherboard so that the boot process can be done "super fast," as well as help speed up the web browsing process.

The connection ports of Chronos 700Z5A and 700Z4A include: HDMI, headset and mic, 2 USB 3.0 ports and 1 USB 2.0 port, with memory card slot supporting SD, SDHC, SDXC and MMC cards.

Reportedly, Samsung will bring both new models of their laptops to display at the upcoming IFA 2011 event.

Currently, the Korean technology firm has yet to disclose details about the price and release date.

You finished reading the article "Samsung unveiled two Series 7 Chronos laptops" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
