

Simple ways to help your baby learn to speak

Learning to read your baby's cries and respond or sing them short songs and small talk are simple ways to help your baby learn to talk early.

According to education experts, between the ages of 4 and 6 months, babies begin to babble two-syllable words like "baba", "mama" and use pronunciation to express feelings of satisfaction or discomfort. Learning how to "read" your baby's cries and respond, sing them short songs, chat with them, etc. are simple ways to help your baby learn to talk early.

Simple ways to help your baby learn to speak

Here are 10 simple ways to help your baby learn to speak

first

Pay attention to the baby

You can even "talk" to your child from the moment he has the first hum. Please respond to your baby's cute sounds by looking him in the eyes, nodding, talking. Baby will begin to understand that your parents are interested in you.

2

Answer the baby's cry

Before having a vocabulary and using language, your baby will use crying to communicate with you. So when your baby cries, never ignore it. Respond to your baby, perhaps with cuddles, questions, or caresses. At that time, the baby knows he is "listened". You also learn how to "read" your baby's cry, see if it's because he's hungry, tired, or uncomfortable because it's too hot or cold.

3

Small talk with baby

Talk to your baby when you change her diaper or tell her what you're doing to prepare her dinner. These simple ways will help your baby build vocabulary and understand the connections between things. say and do.

4

Singing short songs

Even if you don't know the tune, you can read rhyming sentences for your baby to hear. The process of repeating melodious words will be the first step for your baby to remember his favorite words.

5

Read to your baby

Young children may show an interest in books sooner than you think. Try reading to your baby a favorite book or a picture book that he or she stares at. This is also a way to help children build basic vocabulary.

6

Remind again and again

If your child has reached the age of kindergarten and still does not speak well, you should introduce him to many different people and environments, and teach him to say simple words by repeating them over and over. Practice by repeating will motivate your baby to actually want to say the first words. Repetition is key to learning anything, and your baby's first words are no exception.

7

Encourage each child's efforts

When your baby starts babbling, even if it's just words that you have to "translate" forever, give him praise for his effort and help him increase his confidence to love talking and keep learning. speak.

8

Watch out for your child's language cues

Keep an eye on your child's language development milestones, but don't worry too much if he's just a little behind his peers. However, when the delay is a bit too much, consult a professional to determine exactly if your child is just "lazy" to talk or has some other problem.

You finished reading the article "Simple ways to help your baby learn to speak" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

---