Lineup in the early Auto Chess Mobile game

Line up straight lines

If you have a lot of melee pieces, you can place them close to the enemy so that the battle starts faster. So a straight line formation will help gamers get the best results.

Usually this formation will start in the middle of the board and begin to spread to the sides. This tactic is also very effective when you like Thich Nhan, but you should leave this piece in the last row. Like that, Thich Khuyen can jump straight to the heroes that cause damage in the back of the enemy's tank.

Use angle formation

If you have a lot of tankers in your hand and quite a lot of generals that deal damage, then prioritize protecting the pieces that cause main damage. And if you want to pull your opponent closer to you, let your troops get away from the dangerous area.

Imagine as your army is an onion. In it, the resisting generals will be outside and the damage generals will be inside, to help these chess not be attacked immediately.

In case you protect the heroes who cause the main damage but leave the flag on the side that is missing, then surely these pieces will be immediately targeted by Assassins. So, put the pieces with the highest resistance to the defensive angle near the enemy.

Lineup in the mid game phase

At the middle of the game is when you should focus on chess pieces that can use AOE skills effectively.

Avoid the AOE of the enemy team

Eating the ultimate in your mouth is something that no gamer wants so using a defensive strategy is a good example of this. It's easy for the control units to rush straight into the entire enemy team if you use this tactic.

So it's best to divide your lineup into 2 ways as follows:

1. Method 1: Keep the important pieces in the middle of the board but leave the pieces that are able to tank well into 2 positions on both sides of the board. If fortunate, these 2 well-tolerated chess pieces can pull the enemy team's AOE skills in the wrong direction.
2. Method 2: Divide your army into 2 different groups. However, you need to have 2 pieces that can do good damage and 2 pieces that have good resistance and divided into 2 groups. If this group is weaker than the other, this will be a big problem because if the other party is too weak, the weaker group will be quickly destroyed before receiving the opponent's AOE and then the total skill will be for the other group.

Create conditions for your chess pieces to use the previous spell

Using AOE skills before an opponent is also one of the best ways to win. Some chess such as the Navy General, Slap Hero, Dark Chi Linh, the Hunter of Love and the Claw and the Wolf all need to use the skill as soon as possible.

It is important to use the skill as quickly as possible and avoid being killed too soon before the skill is used.

This means that these pieces must have good resistance. If the above chess pieces that you currently own are two stars, the problem does not have to worry. If 1 star, you should do the following two ways.

1. Put these pieces after the resistance of the generals . Thus, these generals are only affected by damage from wide area skills and from ranged heroes.
2. Or put in the first row, but there will be two pieces of bearer standing on either side. This will help these pieces to be noticed immediately but not too much concentration, avoid being killed too quickly.

Reflect with the opponent's lineup

If you want to counterattack effectively, you must look at the opponent's squad and move your pieces to achieve the best effect to increase the victory.

1. Look at the opponent's chess board and place the main damage pieces away from the Destroyer, the Slap Shatter and the Healers
2. Put some units in a single position to lure the enemy to use the AOE indiscriminately. If keeping 1/3 of the team with AOE skills is best.
3. If the enemy uses Assassins pieces, you should place pieces of resistance against the pieces that cause main damage to protect them.
