

Sony is about to add a new line of netbooks

A netbook model included in Sony documents submitted to FCC for approval, with the same battery and charger as the Vaio W, this may be a new line of its netbooks.

A netbook model included in Sony documents submitted to FCC for approval, with the same battery and charger as the Vaio W, this may be a new line of its netbooks.

This model is codenamed Sony PCG-2121 , currently there is no information on when this device was born and configured. However, based on the Sony document given to the FCC, but the battery parameters such as the AC adapter VGP-AC19V39, the 19.5V battery, can be seen with a Vaio W.

A line of netbooks like Sony Vaio W may appear.

Also according to this document, the new model owns Qualcomm's Gobi 2000 WWAN model, which supports 3G besides the Atheros AR5B95 WLAN module and Bluetooth.

Vaio W is the first series of Sony netbooks, previously launched P series with an 8-inch screen, but with high price and the manufacturer confirmed, "the machine is not a netbook".

You finished reading the article "Sony is about to add a new line of netbooks" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

