For those who love the VAIO brand, there are two beautiful laptops that they cannot forget: VAIO TZ and Z. Although later, TZ has been replaced by TT but its design style has been photographed. greatly influenced other VAIO machines from FW, CW to SR. But the best TZ inherited thought engine is Z.

In the CES 2010 exhibition, Sony introduced S to replace the SR and F for the FW, while the upgrade of Z was still not visible. Fortunately, the new generation Z1 is now available through a promotional video made by Sony.

There is no information about the official Z1 configuration yet, but in this ad, you can see rumors of 4 128GB SSDs running RAID or a backlit keyboard will come true. We have not seen any information about TransferJet technology or Intel Core i7 processor like the F1. Other features such as a 13.1-inch screen, carbon-fiber casing and aluminum frame will remain the same.

Through this video, Sony also introduced a new slogan exclusively for Z: Executive Decision , temporarily translated as the operator's choice. Unlike other manufacturers that only target business people whether their positions are low or high, Z1 is created exclusively by Sony. And of course, everything has its price. $ 1799 is only enough to buy the lowest configuration of the old Z, so don't expect the new Z1 to be cheaper than this number!
