

Standard eating rules of countries in the world

Japanese people transfer food with chopsticks, Arabs always eat with their right hands are unique eating rules in the world.

1. 20 golden rules on the dining table that everyone must know
2. Cultural standards of countries around the world

Our grandparents had a customary 'Immigration', so if you have the opportunity to travel to a certain country or have a foreign partner, learn through culture as well as eating. of the enemy to avoid losing their hearts. Here are 15 special rules for how to dine in many different countries, also learn to be applicable in your life.

1. Korea: Please wait for your turn

With the eating culture of Koreans we can easily see on the movies or reality shows of this country. In the Korean dining table, the oldest people in the house often sit first, then the youngest. And when we eat we have to wait for the oldest man to start picking up food to eat. If you are invited by someone older, welcome it with your hands.

2. Japan: Do not pass food with chopsticks

With the culinary culture of the rising sun, when you want to pick up food and invite someone, you should absolutely not use chopsticks to move, because according to Japanese tradition, chopsticks are used to pass bones to the dead, so if you take that action in front of a Japanese person, you are afraid they will judge you not high.

Besides, if the meal you put along chopsticks on food is also a taboo in Japan. If you are in a restaurant, this is considered to be rude to the boss

3. China: Don't point chopsticks at others

At the Chinese dining table you absolutely never use chopsticks to point at other people's faces, this shows disrespect and disrespect for people in the tray.

4. Thailand: Don't eat food on plates

In Thailand, for a meal, the fork is not a tool that we use directly to eat but is only used to help us push the food into a spoon. Special cases are meals without rice or sticky rice but only salty food, we can still use fork. In addition, the Thai people do not use chopsticks for meals like Vietnamese people.

5. He: Tilting the spoon

In the UK, when enjoying a soup, you also need art, when eating should eat from the edge of the spoon. You can tilt both the spoon and the bowl to show politeness to the landlord.

6. Arab countries: Eat with your right hand

Most Arabs usually eat by hand, but not all hands are used to pick up food. This country stipulates, when eating only using the right hand, do not use the left hand, because this is an unclean hand.

7. Chile: Do not eat by hand

In contrast to the Arab country, Chileans use knives and forks to eat. They never use anything to pick up their hands, even fries also need to use a fork, not reach in.

8. Italy: Only accept the invitation when invited for the second time

Italy is always known for its delicious food like cakes and spaghetti noodles. However, unlike many other countries, Italians keep their mind in someone's invitation to eat, usually if you invite them to eat for the first time, they will refuse, but later if you continue to invite they will agree with you right away. When eating, remember that no extra cheese is required, this action is indecent to the landlord.

9. Tanzania: Come late when eating

Perhaps for us there is nothing uncomfortable by waiting at a meal, but in Tanzania, coming early or arriving on time for a meal is a taboo job, which shows this visitor is not respectful. host. So, to show politeness you have to be late for 20 minutes to be the custom of the Tanzanians.

10. France: Don't be in a hurry to eat lunch

Lunch in France is considered a time for everyone to relax after a hard working hour. So during meals, people often eat slowly and talk happily together. So, during lunch, don't eat 'mighty like buffalo buffalo' to quickly return to work.

11. When to finish eating the dish

In some countries like Japan, France and some other countries, when a guest eats all the food on the plate, that person is very satisfied with the meal that day. However, places like the Philippines, Cambodia or Egypt say that eating out of food means that the hostess is lacking and makes you not satisfied enough.

12. India: Burp after eating

You have burps after eating and eating well. This is a way to show respect for homeowners in India and China. And you like 'farting' after eating, then come to Eskimo. This shows your appreciation for that meal.

13. Jamaica: Notice what your child eats

What you eat is just as important as how you eat them. Jamaican people believe that children who eat chicken before they can talk will never speak.

14. Kazakhstan: Don't expect them to bring you a full cup of tea

For Vietnamese people, we drink tea to fill up. If we pour 1/2 cup, the guest will assume that the host does not welcome them warmly. On the contrary, in Kazakhstan they only bring you half a cup of tea. For them, a full cup of tea is a sign that you want to leave.

15. Egypt: Don't pick up a salt jar

Be careful when using spices. In Egypt, you'll make the chef upset if you pick up the salt. With the Azerbaijanis, pouring salt overflow is a sign of starting an argument.

You finished reading the article "Standard eating rules of countries in the world" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.