

Terrifying spectacle: Anaconda's male python to death after the 'rain cloud'

Reminding everyone that Anaconda was terrified, but when he looked at the picture posted on National Geographic and heard the real story behind the photo for the author himself, it is certain that everyone had their hair on the neck.

1. Shivered, grappling with the giant South American python underwater
2. Crying with 10 giant python species in the world
3. Scary nape with the largest mouse hunting screen in the world of the "beast" giant Anaconda

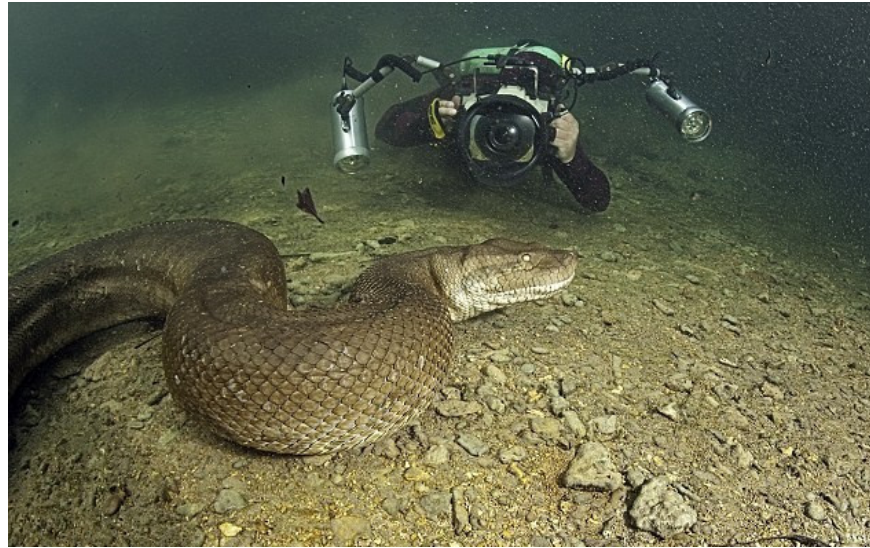

And this is that picture.

Photographer Luciano Candisan was fortunate to capture this picture in a particularly large snake tracking in the Brazilian wetlands. Do you think these 2 Anaconda pythons are playing around?

The truth is that a female Anaconda python (green, larger in size) is killing the male after mating in the riverbed.

Cannibalism is also quite common in the animal world but when witnessing this horrifying scene, photographer Luciano is terrified. After "killing" his partner, the python dragged the male body into the grass.

Anaconda female is large in size - about 4 - 5m long.

According to biologist Jesús Rivas of New Mexico Highlands University, male python python behavior is easy to understand. After mating, children can become pregnant. During 7 months of pregnancy, the python will fast or eat very little. About 30% of the body weight will be devoted to creating the next generation. Therefore, males are a rich source of protein with female pythons before entering pregnancy and childbirth.

After this photo, we have another horror story about the Anaconda that makes many people build their hair.
