

The 5 most mysterious legends in the magnificent city of Paris

Legends of ghosts, mysterious serial killings in Paris, the world's capital of light always frighten many people. Here are the 5 most frightening mysterious legends in the magnificent capital of France.

Legends of ghosts, mysterious serial killings in Paris, the world's capital of light always frighten many people. Here are the 5 most frightening mysterious legends in the magnificent capital of France.

1. Ghosts in the theater

The famous "Ghost in the theater" musical is based on the popular novel of the same name by Gaston Leroux. The Opéra Garnier theater and the legend of the lake below the theater are the inspiration for Gaston Leroux to write one of the best masterpieces of all time.

Legend has it that Ernest, a young pianist, had deformed his appearance in the conservatory fire in 1873. His fiancée, a ballerina also died in the fire. Distressed, depressed by the departure of his fiancée, frightened by everyone's gaze, Ernest hid in the cellar next to the famous lake under the Opera Garnier.

Ernest lived the rest of his life in the theater cellar and completed his oeuvre, a saint of love and death. But his body was never found.

2. Baker and barber in Île de la Cité

This frightening story takes place in one corner of two 15th-century streets, now replaced by Hôtel-Dieu de Paris in Île de la Cité, an island on the Seine in the center of Paris. A baker and a barber cooperated to make the most horrifying, evil deal ever known in history.

The barber cut his client's neck, his subjects were poor students and cut the body into parts in a secret cellar and moved directly through a door to the bakery immediately. The baker uses them to make different cakes. Those pies are loved and hunted by many people during that period.

The dog of a German student named Alaric, one of the victims "received" the unusual thing and barked fiercely to watch the neighbors. The secret of the sky and the cellar contained tools used to cut the bodies of the two sick people discovered. They admitted their crimes and were burned alive in iron cages.

3. Neighborhood of miracles

La Cour des Miracles is a French term used to refer to the slums of Medieval Paris. This is a place where prostitutes, criminals, patients, homeless people, and elderly people live together, creating an extremely chaotic society. They often avoid venturing into neighborhoods to avoid disturbing the lives of Parisians.

When night falls, the miraculous thing will happen, the criminals disappear, the sick again healthy, the old are younger. Therefore, these slums are called neighborhoods of miracles.

4. The mysterious crypt

In the city of Paris there exists a grave of more than 320km long containing more than 6 million human bones. The skeletons are tied together into blocks of other shapes on the floor. The skull was straightened up to close the walls.

During the Gallo-Roman period, humans had to exploit limestone to build strong houses. Gradually, over time, this activity created an underground system.

By 1786, when the churches and cemeteries were dislocated and had to stop functioning. Some suggested that the dead body could be taken to underground mines. Immediately, that was done, the full-bodied wagons quietly walked in the dark into the underground tunnel system.

5. Cathedral of Our Lady of Paris and the gate of evil spirits

Biscornet is a young blacksmith who lived in the 13th century. With outstanding talent, he was trusted and tasked with forging the gate of the church of Our Lady. In the face of too much responsibility and fear of discrediting he took his own soul in exchange for the help of the devil. When completed, the door is actually a more magnificent masterpiece than any previous Biscornet work. This special door is only opened when it is sprinkled with holy water.

You finished reading the article "The 5 most mysterious legends in the magnificent city of Paris" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.