

The 70-year-old man bought 11 smartphones attached to bicycles to go catch Pokémon, who are crazy fans

Two years have passed since the wave of Pokémon Go made the world go crazy, but the 70-year-old old man in Taiwan still wanders around the street on a bike with 11 smartphones to catch Pokémon.

Two years have passed since the wave of Pokémon Go made the world go crazy, but the 70-year-old old man in Taiwan still wanders around the street on a bike with 11 smartphones to catch Pokémon.

Mr. Chen San-yuan, who lives in Taiwan, has chosen to give himself a unique pleasure when he is different from other 'peer-to-peer' friends who are traveling around the streets and parks to hunt Pokémon with the set. Tools include 11 smartphones mounted on bicycles and a bag full of batteries.

Even, he was so absorbed in hunting Pokémon so many days that he did not come home before 4 am.

Mr. Chen San-yuan said, the money for craftwork alone has cost nearly VND 35 million per month. But he believes that this game will help me prevent Alzheimer's, so the money is completely worth it.

In 2016, Mr. Chen was taught by his nephew to play Pokémon Go. And from then until now, when the game was less hot, he was still a loyal fan of the game.

See more:

1. Blind gamers take down 7,600 networks in the game Call of Duty: WWII
2. In prison, hackers can still steal more than $ 200,000 through a tablet without an Internet connection

You finished reading the article "The 70-year-old man bought 11 smartphones attached to bicycles to go catch Pokémon, who are crazy fans" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.