

The 89-year-old grandmother, who has been playing the game for nearly 40 years, is the oldest gamer in the world

Mrs. Hamako Mori, 89 years old, Japanese has a strong passion for game consoles and online games.

Mrs. Hamako Mori, 89 years old, Japanese has a strong passion for game consoles and online games.

Mori started playing the game nearly four decades ago on Cassette Vision, a handheld game console that debuted in 1981. After that, he played many other games on Nintendo's Famicom such as Dragon Quest or The Legend of Zelda.

But in recent years, his joy is to upload his gaming clips to his personal page on YouTube.

Ms. Mori said the new games now have very nice graphics and "it's great to be able to live long to play games".

Mori added that as you get older, you should play more games with others to enhance memory. Although the ability to play games of the elderly will hinder young people, but when many old people play the game, it will attract the publisher's attention and may set up a separate server for old gamers.

According to Mori, everyone should play games when they are young. You will not be able to pursue other passions like fashion and sports when you get old but with the game is different, it is even more wonderful when you play in old age.

In the future, Mori wants to experience and try adventure action RPGs like Grand Theft Auto and Elder Scrolls.
