

The Apple website starts counting down for 9-9 events, has live streams

Apple yesterday updated its website, saying it will broadcast live the event of introducing iPhone 6 on September 9, which is highly anticipated by the technology and users. You can go to the Live page to update relevant information as well as watch live events coming up next Tuesday.

Apple yesterday updated its website, saying it will broadcast live the event of introducing iPhone 6 on September 9, which is highly anticipated by the technology and users. You can go to the Live page to update relevant information as well as watch live events coming up next Tuesday.

Live video from our special event will be right here.
And so will a whole lot more.

Join us at Apple.com on September 9 at 10 a.m. PDT to follow every moment.

Apple can also broadcast programs to Apple TV with a dedicated channel as they did with previous events. MacRumors will also broadcast the event live at MacRumors.com and MacRumorsLive on Twitter for those who can't see it directly on Apple's home page.

The venue is at the Flint Center located in the De Anza College complex in Cupertino. This is where the company launched its first Mac 30 years ago. The event will start at 10 am Pacific Time ( ie 00:00 on September 10 in Vietnam ).

You finished reading the article "The Apple website starts counting down for 9-9 events, has live streams" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.