Facebook Gaming is basically a completely free application that allows you to play Facebook games easily and quickly without going through the Facebook platform like before.

Hundreds of millions of people around the world are forced to quarantine themselves at home under social spacing measures to prevent the spread of the COVID-19 epidemic, causing demand for entertainment services such as games and videos. and spike streaming. Recognizing this "rare" opportunity, Facebook quickly launched the Facebook Gaming mobile application - which is scheduled to release in June.

Facebook Gaming is basically a completely free application that allows you to play Facebook games easily and quickly without going through the Facebook platform like before, as well as joining local groups. Like, watch and stream games from your mobile phone with a feature called Go Live with just a few simple steps.

Android Gaming Facebook

It's clear that Facebook's main reason for launching this app is to gain a bigger market share in the $ 160 billion mobile gaming industry, as well as its ambition to build a competitive online entertainment platform. be with big names that have existed for years like Twitch and YouTube. The fact that hundreds of millions of people are at home at the present time is a better opportunity for Facebook Gaming to attract market attention.

The application will include casual games and also Facebook's gaming community network. However, the failure to encourage people to create and watch live streams (broadcast livestream) will probably be a decisive factor in the destiny of this application.

Currently, Facebook Gaming will have no ads. However, Facebook will make money through the livestream viewers' stars, similar to Twitch's approach.

Facebook Gaming is only available for Android. The iOS version is waiting for Apple approval and will be released to the App Store immediately after being licensed.
