The first leaked build of Windows 8 appeared yesterday. However, the interface is still not different from the Windows 7 operating system.

The version of Windows 8 Build 7850 was unexpectedly shared by Betaarchive page on its website yesterday morning but was soon removed. However, many other websites and forums have been downloaded and continue to spread widely through other protocols such as torrent.

The version of Windows 8 Build 7850 is quite small, only about 2.5GB. According to the source said, this is the Milestone 1 version, ie the first version of the roadmap to develop a version of Microsoft operating system including Milestone 1, 2 and 3 before switching to beta, RC and RTM.

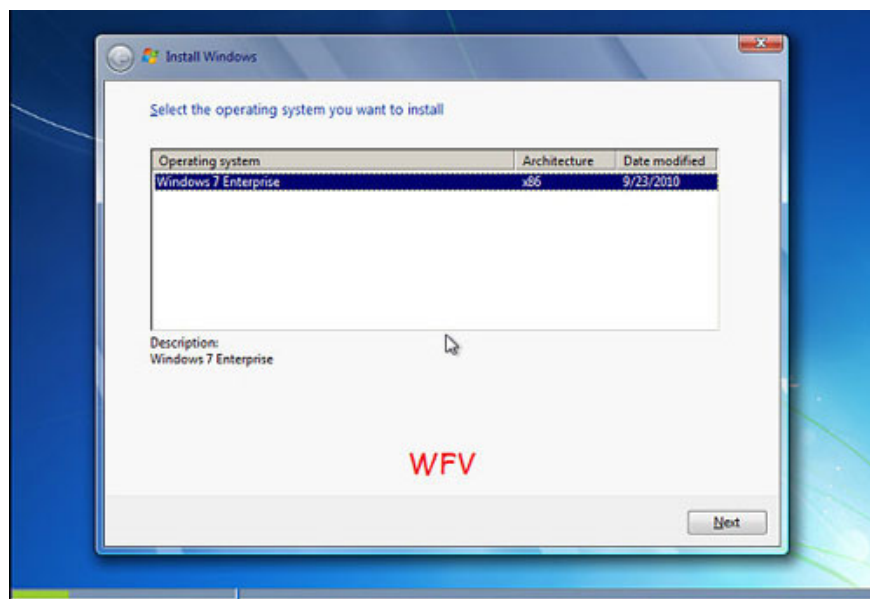

The first screenshots from shared forums show that this build has very little interface change compared to the current Windows 7 version. According to Tuanpekoe members on the Windowsvn forum, fonts and icons are larger, most titles are moved in the middle instead of the left margin as it is today. In addition, some changes also appear in Taskbar, Explorer, Windows Photo Viewer and pre-installed .Net Framework 4.0.

According to previous information, Windows 8 beta will be available in August this year.

Some images of the first version of Windows 8 were revealed.

The installation is clearly codenamed Windows 8 code Milestone 1.

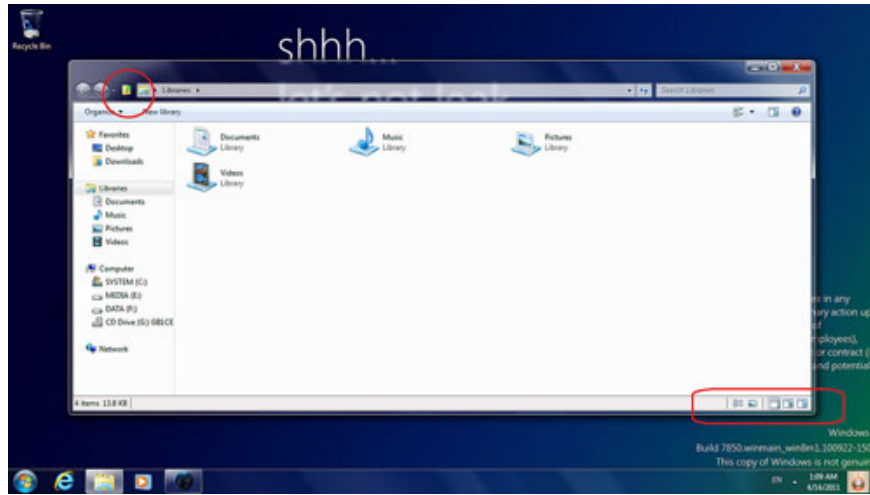

The name of the operating system is still Windows 7 Enterprise with the implementation date of September 23 last year.
