

The king cobra attacks the iguana and is surprised by the opponent's counterattack

The video captures a life-and-death confrontation between a king cobra and a Monitor, a relative of the Komodo dragon.

The video captures an interesting confrontation between a king cobra and a Monitor, a relative of the Komodo dragon.

Both animals try to increase their body size to scare the opponent. The iguana used its strong tail to hit the cobra, making the opponent stunned. Angered, the cobra rushed to bite a powerful blow with extremely dangerous venom to the head of the lizard. However, this move of the cobra is useless against the lizard. Because the skin of the monitor lizard is hard and thick, the king cobra's fangs cannot pump venom through it.

In response, the lizard rushed to bite the snake's body, throwing the opponent to the ground. In the end, the direct confrontation between the king cobra and the iguana ended with the victory going to the iguana. The king cobra has become the "meal" of the opponent. After eating, the iguana walked leisurely.

The iguana is a fairly large reptile that looks like a gecko (lizard) but is larger and longer. Adults can be up to 2.5 - 3 m long, weighing about 10 kg. The whole body is covered with a layer of scales.

Iguanas are carnivores, their food is usually mice, bugs, frogs, snakes, eels, fish, lizards. In addition, they especially like to eat dead and smelly animals.

The iguana has a rather heavy appearance, but when it comes to chasing prey, it runs very fast.

You finished reading the article "The king cobra attacks the iguana and is surprised by the opponent's counterattack" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.