

The Lake District has been recognized by Unesco as a world natural wonder

The Lake District, also known as the lake area, is a national park located in Cumbria, in the northwest of England. This park is one of the most famous parks in the country, each year about 18 million tourists visit.

The Lake District, also known as the lake area, is a national park located in Cumbria, in the northwest of England. This park is one of the most famous parks in the country, each year about 18 million tourists visit.

Lake District National Park is considered the most popular holiday destination in the UK, it consists of 16 small lakes, with more than 150 high peaks. In addition, there are 6 national nature conservation centers, more than 50 picturesque valleys. The Lake District is also the most ideal ecotourism destination in the world, voted by the 'National Geographic Magazine' as one of the fifty landmarks to be in life. After three attempts to list the world heritage list, this park was recently recognized as a natural wonder of the world by Unesco.

Let's admire the following 13 photos to see the wild beauty of this place.

Many valleys in the Lake District are made up of glaciers during the Ice Age.

Since then, farmers have contributed to preserving and forming this area through a method that includes many fields surrounding the walls.

The feature of this area is the mountains and clear blue water.

The highest Skafell mountain and England's largest Lake Windemere are located in this area. Lake District is divided into three western regions, north and south Lake District. Among the most famous lakes here are Windemere and Grasmere lakes.

However, the interesting thing is that this park has only one main lake - Bassenthwaite Lake.

Everything around is a pond, lake or water.

This is the third time Lake District has made an effort to list the world heritage list.

This time it won the cultural landscape category.

The Lake District is a traditional agricultural area that has been exploited from a long time ago. Although the area has been in operation for a long time, it is located close to many industrial cities, but the Lake District still fosters natural resources and maintains a peaceful atmosphere. To this day, the Lake District Park has captivated so many authors, poets and painters.

The Lake District receives about 18 million visitors a year.

Farmers working in the area hope the introduction into the Unesco will help the Lake District be more attractive than international tourists.

But they also hope that Unesco will support monitoring of tourism activities and efforts to preserve the Lake District.

Lake District along with 31 other locations in the UK are recognized as world heritage sites.

Have a happy time!

You finished reading the article "The Lake District has been recognized by Unesco as a world natural wonder" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

---

