

The man 'sees' the future makes medicine 'bundle'

Not a character in a Hollywood fantasy movie, a French man who can predict his future makes science impossible to decipher.

In life, many people have longed to know their future . Not a character in a Hollywood fantasy movie, a French man can do something like that. But this is not happiness for him. Why? Imagine, in your whole life, you cannot experience anything new, no wonder, no wonder because you know all that beforehand when it happens.

In 1896, psychiatrist Francois-Léon Arnaud noted a strange case that still led many experts to suffer.

According to Sciences of Us, Louis joined the army. In 1984, he was hospitalized mentally due to memory loss with manifestations of neurasthenia, prolonged headache, insomnia and discomfort. The strangest thing in a man is a familiar feeling that lasts a lifetime. "Louis said he was déjà vu many times since he was young and then he clung to him," Dr. Arnaud wrote. "The patient used to think he was mistaken, but now that feeling really exists ."

For Louis, everything that happened before him was known, even before he knew the title of his brother's articles and weddings.

After being hospitalized for a while, Louis's condition became worse. He began to act violent and feared that his family was plotting to harm him. The Louis family revealed that veterans had been to a treatment center but left immediately because he believed he had been taken there in the past. To the new hospital, Louis repeated the above reactions. Dr. Arnaud noted: " He recognized it all, from the yard, the living room with the sofa with curtains to the garden, the receptionist. He said he saw this scene a year ago and wanted to leave".

The first time I met Dr. Arnaud, Louis talked normally like two unknown people. Later, patients change their words and attitudes. "I recognized you, doctor," Louis laughed. "A year ago, at this time, right in this living room, he greeted me. He asked me questions just like that and I answered the same. Everything was clear. He was good at acting but stopped. ok " Arnaud tried to explain, but Louis didn't change his mind.

According to Arnaud, Louis was "psychedelic déjà vu ", meaning déjà vu increased . The phenomenon of déjà vu is quite common, 60-80% of the population has experienced this phenomenon at least once in their lives. Usually Déjà vu will quickly end but can also become pathological if people, like Louis, cannot escape.

120 years later, scientists rediscovered documents about Louis and published in Cortex. They assumed that the state of the veteran was in fact not related to déjà vu because the déjà vu was fully aware, knowing the feeling of familiarity was odd. If the patient thinks he or she actually lived in that situation, the story will turn to another direction.

Scientists say Louis is more likely to suffer from "re-gathering talk" , memory disorders that cause patients to process new information like old information, and accidentally create more virtual details. In addition, Louis may also suffer from a form of "memory disorder " that asserts all places, places, and people are copied from some origin.

But all this is just a hypothesis, but it is impossible to determine exactly what Louis's disease is. "Perhaps we will never understand the neurological basis in this case, " wrote the authors in Cortex. Anyway, the case is still an important document about déjà vu. It reminds us that sometimes memory is unreliable, easily bent and deceived people.

What is Déjà vu?

Déjà vu is an illusion, feeling familiar (as seen, experienced in memory) in a new environment, setting, never known before or not remembering at all. These may be the experiences of a certain feeling that once witnessed or lived through a situation that happened before (someone who feels this happening has happened in the past not long ago)), although it is not possible to know when those hunches happened. Déjà vu is often a very familiar feeling, "weird", "strange" and full of "occult" and happens most often in dreams, both in reality that this image "has happened out "in the past.
