

The mobile YouTube application is about to be incognito

According to information from Android Police page, the mobile YouTube application is about to have an incognito mode (Incognito).

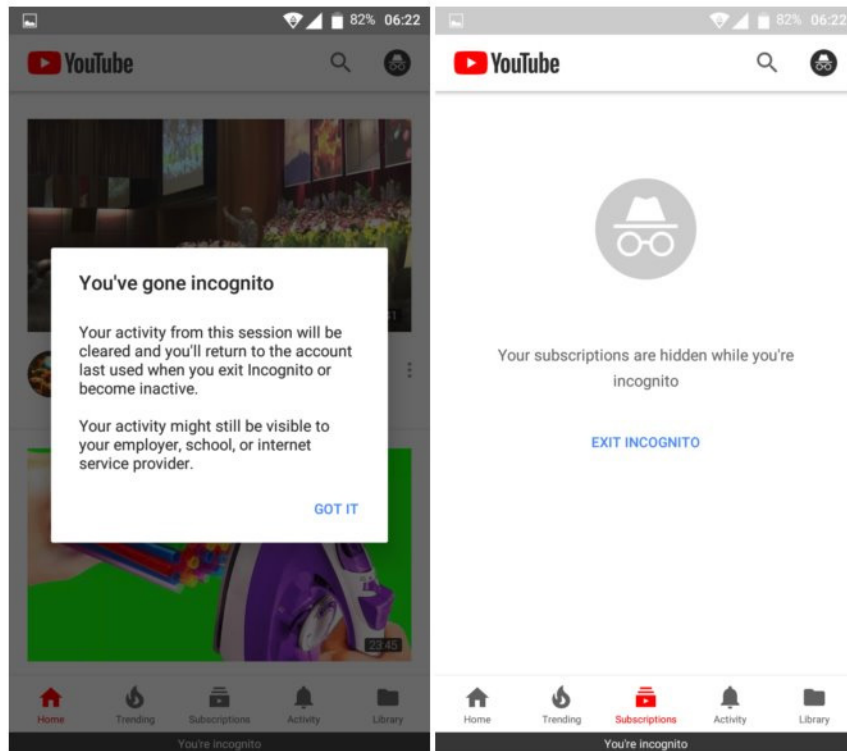

According to information from Android Police page, the mobile YouTube application is about to have an incognito mode (Incognito). When in this mode, your YouTube search and viewing history will not be completely saved, the channels you have subscribed to and currently subscribed to will also be hidden like anonymous browsing mode.

This is good news for users, because they can hide sensitive, private content viewed on YouTube without others knowing.

The account has no incognito mode (left) and the account has an incognito mode integrated (right).

YouTube's incognito mode will be integrated directly into the 'Accounts' section of the application. When in this mode, the incognito icon will replace the avatar from the 'Accounts' section.

Currently Google is testing this mode in certain accounts. In the near future, YouTube updates with new features will be officially released to all users.

See more:

1. 8 apps to help you watch YouTube videos in Chrome floating window
2. Which criteria do YouTube calculate Top Trending?
3. How to turn on the feature that prompts you to watch videos too long on Youtube

You finished reading the article "The mobile YouTube application is about to be incognito" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.