

The small animal terrified the giant elephant to flee

Elephants are the world's largest animals living on the ground. But there is a truth about this giant animal that they are very afraid of two creatures that are much smaller than them: mice and bees.

Elephants are the world's largest animals living on the ground. But there is a truth about this giant animal that they are very afraid of two creatures that are much smaller than them: mice and bees.

Many people do not believe this because as we know the eyesight of elephants is very poor, even discovering the existence of these two small creatures is difficult not to say fear.

To test this fact, two famous effects experts Jamie and Adam conducted a small experiment. They used a white mouse so that the elephant could easily be found on the elephant's path and see its reaction.

Check out the video below to see if the elephant is really afraid of mice.

As soon as the mouse was discovered on the way, the elephant quickly stopped and turned.

Bees are also a terrifying terror to giant elephants.

According to studies conducted by the Elephant Protection Group in Kenya, elephants are very afraid of bees. Every time you hear the bee, the whole herd will stop, trying to determine where the sound comes from then the leader will order the whole herd to retreat.
