The Vaio P series is the lightest 8-inch laptop today.

Intrigued by the vague information before its launch, Sony officially unveiled the P-series laptop, the lightest 8-inch model in the world today. This device is considered the answer of Sony with the trend of netbook, a carrier-style netbook, thin, beautiful, multi-functional but expensive.

Vaio P weighs about 0.64 kg, owns an 8-inch LED backlit screen, with a very high resolution of 1,600 x 768 pixels, a wide standard design, good support for users who can view the site fully by how to roll up. It is equipped with Sony's XBRITE-ECO LCD technology for detailed images, brightly lit.

Machine equipped with 3G mobile network connection.

This is a laptop model that allows users to go anywhere, the outer shell is designed in a variety of colors including red, turquoise, black agate, white crystal and black. Despite its small size, the keyboard is greatly expanded and occupies the entire area below, allowing easy use as on a large laptop.

Integrated device connected 3G mobile network, Wi-Fi and Bluetooth. Battery allows use for 4 hours with normal capacity. Large capacity tables are sold separately for use up to 8 hours.

P series integrates real-time GPS system.

This is also a laptop with real-time GPS functionality, allowing users to easily find addresses such as restaurants, hotels, special and interesting places.

In this tiny version of the laptop, Sony launches the Xross Media Bar interface, allowing access to music, video, image and web browsing features. An integrated webcam allows users to chat with friends.

The keyboard of the device is greatly expanded.

P series installs Windows Vista operating system, supports office applications, complete software like on other laptop versions. In it, an added window allows users to manage and open office files, websites on the side of the screen.

Sony Vaio P series will be retailed for 900 USD in some countries in February this year.
