

This guy has the world's first 512GB iPhone success and Apple Store 'troll'

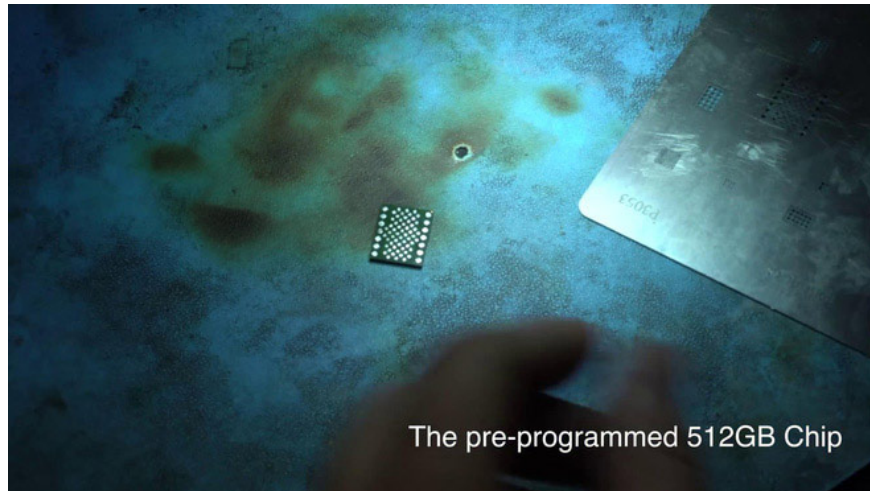

Apple's sale of an iPhone with a maximum capacity of only 256GB made Federico Cerva feel 'uncomfortable' and decided to create the world's first 512GB iPhone 7.

Apple's sale of an iPhone with a maximum capacity of only 256GB made Federico Cerva feel "uncomfortable" and decided to create the world's first 512GB iPhone 7.

In order to realize this bold idea, Federico Cerva had to rely on the help of his friends. The first and most important thing is to have a memory chip of 512GB, and with the help of Chinese friends, Federico has a chip like that. Currently, the 2017 iPad Pro is the only iOS series at the moment with 512GB capacity and most likely this is the source of this chip.

The next thing is that Federic needs to 'program' the chip again to be compatible with the iPhone. He asked another of his friends Fernando to do this.

The pre-programmed 512GB Chip

The rest of the work belongs to Federico, he unzipped his iPhone 7, flashed his current memory chip and sold the new chip. Many people use this technique to upgrade the iPhone's internal memory.

Detach the old memory chip on the iPhone's motherboard with the device.

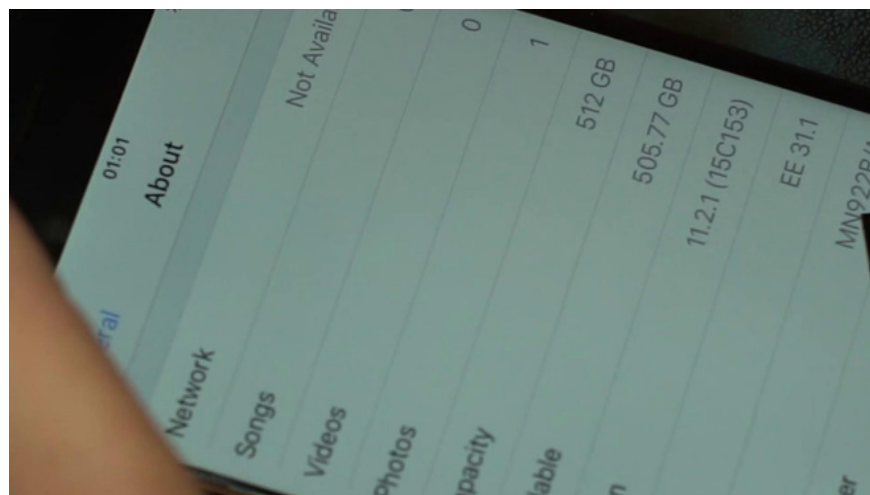

Removing original memory

The old chip of the iPhone has left.

The new 512GB chip is soldered to the motherboard.

And finally the world's first 512GB iPhone was successfully created.

Federico had the first 512GB iPhone 7 in the world. And this guy decided to bring this machine to Apple Store to 'troll' the staff here.

Check out the entire process of creating the world's first iPhone 7 512GB and Federico's Apple Store "troll" in the video below.
