

This is the all-new white interface of the Facebook application on Android, being tested

Facebook is experimenting with a new design for its Android application, the all-new white interface will replace the legendary green, to provide a better user experience.

Facebook is experimenting with a new design for its application on the Android platform, the new all-white interface will replace the legendary green, to provide a better user experience. This is the new discovery of the developer of XDA Developer.

Currently, the Facebook app for Android has a top bar and some blue buttons, some on the interface are gray. However, in the new design being tested, all will be replaced by white. This new interface has many similarities with the design of Messenger.

In the new design, the top bar is white and the buttons are black, the search bar is gray. In addition to changing colors, many icons and menus on the new interface are also resized.

There is currently no information on whether this design is equipped with a dark background. However, with what Facebook has just made for Messenger (integrating Dark Mode on Messenger), we can absolutely believe that this can happen to the planet's largest social network.
