

Tips and strategies for playing impostor in Among Us

Please read tips and tactics exclusively for Impostor in Among Us that TipsMake share in the following article to improve your chances of winning.

During the game Among Us, everyone can easily communicate with each other through voice chat, so sometimes you will hear yourself or someone screaming objectionable, dissatisfied, regretful.

It can be said that Among Us's attraction comes from the appearance of impersonators in the crew. They hid themselves carefully and constantly caused suspicion, controversy as well as silently destroying members of the crew.

Therefore, if you become an impostor, then you are the necessary and most important person in the game.

If enough other Crewmate suspects someone is an impostor then they can be deported and lose. So what can an impostor do to increase your chances of success? What strategies can they use? Here is tips and the answer for you.

1. Tea mixed and destructive

As an impostor, the player's job is to take down the crew members. But stay calm and don't start impatiently.

Starting slowly by integrating into the environment, gaining everyone's confidence, communicating moderately when necessary will be steady steps.

You will also get a lot of fake missions to deceive other members that you are also completing the missions of a crew member.

Or you can also vandalize certain areas so the mission appears, after which innocent crew members will be lured into your trap.

You don't need to be in a hurry, before starting things and hiding inside the vents make sure no one is suspicious or seeing you.

2. Be careful when removing Crewmate

Once you feel safe and sure you haven't been seen, it's time to kill Crewmate. You will approach an innocent crew member and press the button to remove them.

When the crew is removed from the game, the rest of the crew will find the body and announce a traitor. So if the body appears in a quiet place it will be of great help.

You will not be able to kill members quickly due to the long cooldown. Therefore, when you've just killed someone, you need to quickly blend in with your surroundings.

3. Take a stealth action like a Ninja

An extremely important issue with finding someone to destroy is where you broke in. If you leave the room and are caught by someone, then the body reappears in it you will definitely become a suspect.

However, you can jump into the vents on the floor. Hide carefully there, any crew that roam around will not know where you are. So after killing someone can jump in the vent and wait there for as long as you need.

It's important to stress three times, stealthily, acting like a ninja and working not to let others know is the key to being successful as an impostor.

3. Be smart when voting

When a body is found, or once someone presses the big button in the main room, it's time to vote to get rid of someone. During this stage, you can open the chat window and talk to the players in the room.

Your job now is to be innocent or be able to deduce guilt on someone else.

If you previously played the Impostor in Among Us has done a good job integrating successfully into the surrounding environment, this stage will become quite simple, no one will doubt you. At this time, negotiations and discussions often go nowhere and voting is often a draw.

4 . Don't be too prominent in Among Us

A standout impostor would definitely arouse suspicion. So, instead of walking around revealing its purpose of following potential victims, impostor players should pretend they're doing the same thing as Crewmate, such as approaching and standing next to the computer. , engine .

Other Crewmates will do the same. Although imposters can't do repair missions or have the ability to bunkers, pretending to work makes it harder for Crewmate to identify players as imposters.

Another important aspect of acting is participating in the discussion when a corpse is found.

During the brief discussion period before each vote of expulsion, the impostor needs to act as if they were a genuine Crewmate who is trying to win like everyone else.

Although an impostor may lie and blame an innocent Crewmate, this is discouraged as Crewmate appears to be popping up all over the map.

This means that any Crewmate accused by an impostor may have alibi because another Crewmate happens to be by their side in a certain area.

Likewise, maintaining absolute silence will only raise suspicions. Which means the impostor's best tactic is to act without leaving a clue.

Ask questions, try to determine who was where . And when the team thinks they know who the impostor is, agree with their opinions. Even if it was another impostor. Trying to prove will only get the impostor player exposed.

5. Passively destroy and close all doors in Among Us

Acting without suspicion is a tactic that needs to be skillfully used, but an impostor still needs to find a chance to finish off someone else. This means that the impostor needs to actively erect barriers that will make it easier to kill.

In practice, this means vandalizing whenever possible and closing doors before killing someone. These will give the impostor some chance to murder one of their targets with less risk of being caught.

In particular, destroying the light is a must to create a great effect if only a few players are left. Similarly, something as simple as closing the door before killing an opponent will give the impostor a few seconds to quickly escape if necessary.

6. Avoid being caught in Among Us

This may seem obvious, but an impostor should avoid being seen as they rush to kill. One situation that impostor players often encounter is witnessing murder.

But they were not seen by a nearby player but were found to be killing on security cameras. It's a small thing and easy to overlook, but there are cameras scattered all over the map.

A red flash appears to mean someone is viewing the feed from the security department. So always make sure to check the camera's status before removing other players.

Another important thing to never be seen again is the use of the ventilation system. Moving along the vent pipes is a possibility only for an impostor, meaning that if an impostor player is seen using it, they will more or less reveal their identity.

So imposters should avoid using the vents too often - especially early in the game when there are many players around.

In fact, some players may just want to use the vent for a quick escape after committing murder. After all, being caught near the corpse raises suspicion, so going somewhere that is not a crime scene seems plausible.

Just make sure you escape to a room where no one is there. Avoid using the ventilation system to enter crowded or well-ventilated areas such as cafes or offices.

Also, be sure not to use the ventilation system to enter areas where cameras are active.

7. Sort Crewmate in Among Us

While it is true that imposters need to kill nearly all of their "fellow citizens," it may be worthwhile to choose who the impostor wants to avoid killing.

A good part of the game revolves around banishing players, meaning that impostor players may want to tilt things in their favor by leaving less skilled players alive for them. less likely to identify an impostor.

Beginners are the most potential victims, as they are not familiar with the game yet, meaning they don't know how the game works yet.

Therefore, if an impostor sees someone clearly struggling to find their way on the map or seems genuinely ignorant during the discussion, they may want to let such people live a little longer. .

Instead, target more experienced players first. The rest will be more easily resolved later in the game.

A Crewmate will try to provide as much information as possible during meetings, but if you are an Impostor, don't be afraid to lie wildly or stoned.

Above are 7 tips and tactics specific to Impostor in Among Us. Follow them to improve your chances of winning.

Wish you happy gaming.
