Tips for playing Story of Seasons: Friends of Mineral Town

Buy some chickens

One of the easiest ways to make sure to start earning an income is to buy a chicken. Chickens are so easy to raise, all you need to do is put an egg in the incubator. They can graze outside when the player rings the bell, which limits the amount of food they need in a year. On top of that, the first chicken only has 1500 gold, which is a pretty low price for animals that can double in price after 3 days.

Limit farming

While everyone's first farmer instinct might be to plow the field in preparation for the crop, this won't work for the first few seasons. The character's endurance in the early stages is extremely limited, while the stamina potion is quite expensive. People will also quickly learn that watering each plant one by one can take up an entire day in the game. Try to create no more than 9 plots of land to start farming.

Take advantage of the hot spring

Character's stamina will be exhausted after the first few seasons, this is when the hot springs come into play. Springs are located in the mountains and when used for several hours, the character can completely restore their stamina back to full. This is a great mid-day stop, especially if people need to mine the farm some more.

Priority upgrade

One way to quickly raise energy is to get some copper and silver ore from the mines. They can be found in the first few levels and when upgrading requires only a single ore. The first upgrades are also extremely cheap, but still very useful, because without them, the character would take a day to work.

Feed the animals outside

As mentioned with chickens, the player can feed livestock outside, including cows, alpacas, and rabbits. By ringing the bell outside the barn, the animals will go out to graze on days when it doesn't rain. At 8 p.m. each night, the bell will automatically ring again to send them outside.

As an added bonus, not feeding animals in this game won't make them sick, but cows won't make milk, chickens won't lay eggs, and camels and sheep won't make wool.

Check out the TV channels in the house

The TV in the house is a great tool that gamers should get used to using. Any channel can help with gaming, especially the weather channel will aid in better planning your day. Meanwhile, the educational channel will give tips and bring interesting information. In addition, on certain days, the entertainment channel will provide hot recipes and the news channel will remind people of upcoming festivals.
