Like other Battle Royale titles, your sole goal in Creative Destruction is to destroy all opponents to become the ultimate survivor. The game offers great modes, great weapons, great character customization and lots of other great features.

When you first enter the game world, you will be against the robot in the first few matches. Once you start playing with real people, things get really tough. To increase your chances of winning for newbies, pocket some useful Creative Destruction tips shared in the following article.

Tips to play Creative Destruction

1. Practice is essential

Don't forget to practice using all the skills in the game's training mode. Creative Destruction's coaching mode is beautifully designed and elaborated. You will hone your building skills, loot items, shoot guns, how to use a parachute and many other important skills. All of these are things you need to be sure of in order to play games effectively and win against other players.

2. Choose a landing site based on experience

If you've ever played Battle Royale, you probably already have experience choosing a landing point. In that case, target some of the map's key locations, defined with a larger font. These places have a lot of higher quality items and this means that many other players may choose to parachute down too. Quickly pick up items to be ready for any battle from soon.

In case you are a newbie, choose places that are less crowded. This also doesn't have to be in the suburbs. You'll find a number of small houses and farms scattered across the map, which can be great areas to land and find a decent amount of loot.

3. Take advantage of the dismantling tool to gather resources

At the start of the game, the dismantling tool is the only weapon you have. Sadly, it is not helpful in eliminating enemies. However, for the build side of the game, this engine is particularly great. During the match you will need to collect different materials. Being raided without any building materials in hand is definitely not the situation you want to encounter.

Therefore, in the early game, you should invest your time in gathering ingredients. Trees and rocks are great resources, but you can also find resources from within buildings. That way, you won't expose yourself to your enemies. Just don't forget to quickly grab the gun when you catch someone stalking.

4. Think ahead of time what to build

After collecting enough resources, you can build various things like walls, barriers, ramps and countless other objects. Think ahead about what you can build and what will help you.

For sure, you'll want a great construction strategy to deceive one or more enemies into falling into your trap. If so, build lots of buildings in one area. Your enemy will tend to want to destroy everything you have built, thinking that you are using all of these buildings as a hideout and hoping to kill you. Jump out of your cover as soon as the enemy is concentrating on what you get them to focus on and enjoy taking them down. Just don't fall into the traps of other players who apply the same tactics.

5. Priority in safe area

Like most survival shooters, the circle shrinks over time, so the battlefield will get smaller and force players to face off against each other in melee battles. The passing storm will leave damage. You need to avoid going in there at all costs. You should proceed to the central area. This greatly reduces the distance to travel to the next circle.

6. Choose the right weapon for long-range, mid-range and melee combat

There are many different weapons you can use in Creative Destruction. It all completely depends on you in choosing the gun to fight. However, always look for a long-range gun like a sniper rifle or a sniper assault rifle, a melee weapon like the SMG, a shotgun and a mid-range weapon like the assault rifle. That way, you will have the weapon you need for each different case.

7. Move quickly and safely

When traveling from point A to point B, you need to pay attention to speed and safety. These are two important factors that you need to keep in mind. You should avoid running in a straight line. Otherwise, you are very susceptible to being shot by a long-range weapon like a sniper rifle. To make it difficult for the enemy to lock the target, you can follow a zigzag.

In addition, do not move through the empty lands and roads through mountains and towns. This is because those places have few hiding places if you are being attacked.

8. Apply suppression of fire

When confronting enemies in a long-range battle, you will find that they almost always build some structures to hide. This will be a great opportunity to apply repressive firepower. The opponents will be in build mode and will not be armed, so you will have an advantage. Repeatedly firing on the target in order to force them to continue rebuilding, this will devalue the hideout. After a few good suppression shots, your opponent will have quite a few resources left. This is a great tactic to take down your opponents.

9. Occupy high ground

When entering the final stages of the match, there may be pauses between conflicts. In that case, focus on building a base as high as possible to gain an advantage over enemies from above. The biggest advantage of being in a higher position than your opponent is that you will make headshots easier. Also, such a situation will make it harder for the enemy to target you. However, make sure to build the base in a strategic location. On the hills and the tops of the buildings are ideal places. It also helps you see the effective loop.

The Creative Destruction tips above will equip you with the necessary things to enter the war of life and death in the game. They are useful for all players of Creative Destruction, especially beginners.
