To be honest, I was one of those who played Nioh quite late, because at that time I had not had the chance to experience the game since it was released.

However, even though I tried it a few weeks ago, my feelings are still the same as someone who has played it for a long time because . being 'eaten' by the game ???

After more than 3,000 resurrection deaths, I realized there was something very clear in Nioh. It's that you realize that anything in the game can kill you, or you will even get the feeling that any Mob along the way can be the final boss.

When you first play Nioh, you will certainly die many times by all kinds of different genres, and the reason for dying is even more than the number of times you die.

For the simplest example, you only need to eat up to 2 or 3 basic attacks of a mob, the rate of ascension can be up to 70% or even 'punch and die'.
