

Twitter web version is about to be upgraded

Twitter social network has just announced that it will add features to receive notifications (notifications) in real time in the web-based version.

Twitter social network has just announced that it will add features to receive notifications (notifications) in real time in the web-based version.

Twitter is about to be able to receive notifications in real time

According to Neowin , this means that Twitter-based web users can receive real-time notifications, once someone answers, click on the liked button or retweets on the user's tweets.

This message will be displayed in a pop-up bar and users can set options to receive this notification.

Expected, this new feature will be applied by Twitter within the next few weeks.

It is known that previously Twitter also announced a redesign of the homepage interface, when users can create personal pages by adding some images with larger titles.

You finished reading the article "Twitter web version is about to be upgraded" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

