

Twitter will delete inactive accounts and revoke usernames

Twitter will permanently delete inactive accounts, fake accounts or sub-accounts.

The owner of Twitter social accounts that haven't logged in for 6 months has recently received an email with the message: 'Log in to your account before December 11, or your account will be deleted. and account name will be revoked '.

This new Twitter alert is sent to all Twitter accounts that haven't logged in within the last 6 months. This move by Twitter to clean up accounts inactive. The revocation of account names is intended to provide more accurate and reliable information and encourage users to log in and use this social network more often.

Accordingly, Twitter will permanently delete inactive accounts, fake accounts or sub-accounts.

This decision by Twitter will only affect accounts of those who have died and those who no longer use the social network.

If you want to keep your account, users only need to log in and follow Twitter's instructions, without having to post any tweets on their profile.

In addition to deleting inactive accounts and revoking usernames, Twitter has changed its naming policy. Accordingly, this social network will not allow registration for account names with less than 5 characters.

1. Facebook Viewpoints - New Facebook application, paid survey participants

2. Google can completely ban your account, please protect yourself before it's too late
3. Warning: New malware can hijack Vietnamese users' access to Facebook and Gmail

You finished reading the article "Twitter will delete inactive accounts and revoke usernames" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
