

Wall Street Journal was hacked, apologized and asked people to subscribe to PewDiePie

Last night, a Wall Street Journal website was hacked by PewDiePie fans.

Last night, a Wall Street Journal website was hacked by PewDiePie fans. Specifically, they edited a post on the site so that it looked like the publisher's apology to PewDiePie about their reporters 'misinformation' about him and promised to sponsor him to win. Winning the race on the number of people subscriber.

Immediately after discovering the incident, Wall Street magazine quickly removed the web that was defaced (edit the display content) and conducted a thorough investigation.

WallStreet Journal Public Apology to PewDiePie.

BY T-SERIES

December 17th, 2018

WallStreet Journal would like to apologize to pewdiepie.
Due to misrepresentation by our journalists, those of whom have now been fired, we are sponsoring pewdiepie to reach maximum subscribers and beat Tseries to 80million.
We also need your credit card number, expiry date, and the lucky 3 digits on the back to win the chicken dinner in fortnite.

In February 2017, Wall Street magazine conducted an investigation of this YouTube channel founder Felix Kjellberg, which lost his chance to partner with YouTube Red and Maker Studios, Disney's film producer. Therefore, for PewDiePie fans, Wall Street magazine is a rival.

The claimant responsible for the attack also revealed how to obtain login information into the WSJ's content management system. The hacker said the password is the username.

This is not the first time, PewDiePie fans are fans of their idols. Last month, a hacker exploited a vulnerability in tens of thousands of printers to automatically print out a subscribe call to the PewDiePie channel.

See more:

1. PlayStation Classic was hacked by hackers to play comfortable games from USB after only 1 week of launch
2. Just released iOS 12 has been successfully hacked by Chinese hackers on the iPhone Xs
3. Good hackers find and patch the vulnerability for more than 100,000 other routers

You finished reading the article "Wall Street Journal was hacked, apologized and asked people to subscribe to PewDiePie" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.