

Want to disappear from the Internet, do you think erasing your social network account is done?

On a beautiful day, do you want to be completely offline, no traces on the network? The story is not as easy as you think.

On a beautiful day, do you want to be completely offline, no traces on the network? The story is not as easy as you think.

Those who often spend time on the Internet will probably want to disappear for a while, delete their accounts, every search history . as if they never knew what the Internet was. The 'digital identity' of each person online can be the gateway to many complicated things like harassing personal life .

Try disappearing online to see if it is possible?

But what does 'disappearing' really mean? Did deleting all social network accounts help you disappear?

Bradley Shear, a lawyer specializing in social networking and privacy also points out some ways to help you stay away from the Internet, but there's a warning that you'll have to change many things in your lifestyle. The ways she suggested include:

1. Delete your Facebook account and other social networks (Facebook knows a lot about you and many other things you do online). If not, at least delete the usage data. Twitter and Facebook both store data and allow downloading so you can go to Settings and find a place to delete.
2. More difficult is deleting Gmail. 'Every time you visit, they get your IP,' Shear said. Those who use encrypted mail services like ProtonMail must accept that it is impossible to send messages to Gmail or Yahoo users.

3. Use VPN virtual private network services .
4. Create 'fake facts': fake birthdays, fake emails .
5. Search with DuckDuckGo instead of Google or Yahoo or other tracked search engines.

Looks like just erasing everything is done

But the truth is that all you do on this site doesn't help completely disappear from the Internet.

See also: Google's new Dashboard makes it easy to find collected Google information from users

Our data is collected regularly and unfortunately many people do not know what they are being tracked, and how these data will be used. Ondrtej Krehel, CEO and founder of LIFARS, a company that specializes in digital and network security, explained how big tech companies caught our tails, and escaping them couldn't be simply by Delete the account.

See more: Turn off Facebook, take time to visit these 37 Web sites to add new knowledge every day

You finished reading the article "Want to disappear from the Internet, do you think erasing your social network account is done?" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.