Once you understand the different Creative Commons license licenses, you will be able to quickly find images that suit your needs. Now, Creative Commons has overhauled its search engine to make its massive library search easier and faster than ever.

Creative Commons Search simplifies licenses by, first allowing you to filter them by two large categories. Click 'Filters' and in the 'I want something that I can' section, select 'Use for commercial purposes' or 'Modify and adapt'.

You can choose other filters such as the exact name of the license and some providers available in Creative Commons.

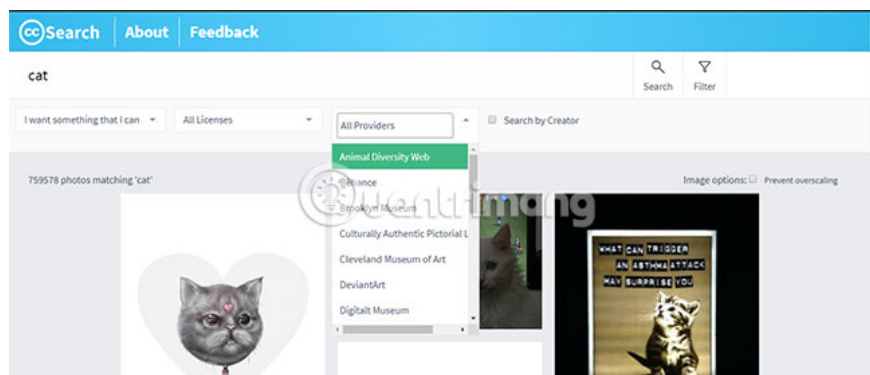

Image providers in Creative Commons Search include a number of big names such as the Metropolitan Museum of Art and artwork from Behance and DeviantArt. CC Search currently has more than 300 million images and the ability to display results very quickly. This will be one of the top options to find free images.

12. This Person Does Not Exist

Can you believe that the above image is not a real person but is it a fake created by a computer? This is probably the best way to use the human face for one of the projects you are working on, without causing anyone any unwanted consequences.

AI technology uses something called Generative Adversarial Network (GAN). Computers learn about people's faces by scanning a large set of data. Based on that, it starts to build each pixel to create a completely new face.

The end result is a  $1024 \times 1024$ px image of a person who does not exist in real life. This Person Does Not Exist creates a random new face every time you visit the page. This is one of the weird things that AI can do.

13. ManyPixels Gallery

Although Stock images are often easy to find, it is much more difficult to find non-copyrighted artwork, especially those that can be used in PowerPoint presentations and official projects. ManyPixels Gallery will help you accomplish this.

Every week, ManyPixels releases a series of new illustrations that you can download for free and use when you see fit. These artworks are generally related to office and work situations, but there are some exceptions. Scroll through the list, you will be able to find images that are suitable for most situations.

More interesting is that you can also change the basic color palette of the design before downloading it as an SVG or PNG file. By default, the palette is set to light blue, but you can turn it into any color you like.

There is also a handy search tool to find out exactly what you want, if you don't like browsing through the options. However, you should browse through the options because the illustrations may not be named or tagged with keywords.

14. Pix-Zip

Pexels, Pixabay and UnSplash are some of the top sites for free Stock images. Each site has its own image database and Pix-Zip puts them all in one place, and allows you to download multiple images.

Pix-Zip has a window with 2 panels. You search for keywords in the right panel and get a large list of images. Drag and drop the image you like into the left panel. You can also change what you are looking for and then select more images from another search result.

It seems that the number of images you can add to the left panel is not limited. Once you've completed your collection, you can download all images as a ZIP file. This feature is extremely convenient.
