Recently, game developer Blizzard announced that they will hold a new product launch event at 10am on May 3 (US time - 0am on May 4 Vietnam time). Currently, it is still unclear which game will be launched by Blizzard in the upcoming event because they are nurturing too many projects.

Among the projects that Blizzard is developing, Warcraft mobile is probably the most anticipated game. Hopefully, the developer will launch it at the upcoming event or at least announce more information about it.

During its recent quarterly earnings report, Activision Blizzard announced that the Warcraft game will be coming to mobile in 2022. Warcraft is one of Activision Blizzard's most popular and successful game series.

Sadly, Activision Blizzard didn't reveal any more information about the mobile version of Warcraft, and its investor report didn't share any other notable details.

In the report, Activision Blizzard only said that it is planning new Warcraft content in 2022, including new experiences in World of Warcraft and Hearthstone. At the same time, it will bring completely new mobile Warcraft content to players for the first time.

We still don't know what Activision Blizzard will bring to global players. It's likely that the game studio won't reveal more about Warcraft for mobile until later this year.

Warcraft content for mobile devices will be quite interesting and worth the wait. This is not the first time Activision Blizzard has created a mobile version to revive their classic series.

At BlizzCon 2018, Activision Blizzard announced the game Diablo Immortal . Event attendees immediately protested and lamented that Diablo Immortal would be exclusive to mobile devices.

Despite that resistance, Diablo Immortal has had some success. Early testers of Diablo Immortal have praised Activision Blizzard for their deft conversion of the classic Diablo experience to mobile devices.

In its recent quarterly earnings report, Activision Blizzard also announced that Diablo Immortal has completed its public beta with positive feedback. The game's official launch date is not far away.
