'Dust in the house' concept is so familiar to us, its level of danger is well known. But things are even more horrible when 45 new toxins have been discovered in indoor dust.

Accordingly, the scientific team led by Professor George Washington of Washington University School of Public Health has just announced the group has identified 45 toxic chemicals that have been and are hidden in dust samples. in houses in 14 states of the United States.

These 45 new toxins come from dust, corroded, spilled particles from consumer products, plastic goods, furniture, carpets, curtains, electronic devices, toys . and those are completely The chemical dust is dangerous but the team has not been able to determine whether 45 toxins directly affect something directly to the human body. However, it is a concern that should be noted and widely alerted before the relevant harm studies from these 45 toxins are published in the near future.

This research has just been published in the Journal of Environmental Science and Technology.(Image source: Internet.)

Previously, chemical dust in fire-resistant materials with the scientific name TDCIPP is a type of dust that can cause cancer in humans.

Another chemical dust called DEHP is capable of causing hormonal disorders, respiratory problems and reducing IQ on children.

And it is impossible not to mention Phthalate - the chemical dust found in soluble solvents present in a variety of vinyl, cosmetic, toys, and phenol found in fire retardant materials. Fluorine, anti-sticking agent on the pot pan is also one of the chemical dust that causes certain effects on the human body if inhaled.

The two types of PFOA and PFOS chemicals found in cell phones, pizza boxes, waterproof products and scratches are all capable of causing immune system and endocrine disorders in the body.
