

Watch the speaker TV open like a butterfly, costing $ 20,100

High-end audio equipment company Bang & Olufsen has just announced its latest product line, a TV with speakers that can 'fold up and open like a butterfly', named Beovision Harmony.

High-end audio equipment company Bang & Olufsen has just announced its latest product line, a TV with speakers that can 'fold up and open like a butterfly', named Beovision Harmony.

The speaker set on this TV is made of premium oak and a thin aluminum plate. It will block in front of the TV screen and spread like wings when you turn on the TV. When the user does not open the image, it can still play music.

The rear TV is the OLED C9 produced by LG, priced at 7000 USD.

Please see the video below to better understand the mechanism of opening the speaker when the user turns on the TV:

In addition to the oak color version, Beovision Harmony TV also has another version of Gray Melange with the outside made of gray braided fabric. Users can choose to place this unique TV on a shelf or mount it on a wall.

Beovision Harmony TV is undoubtedly one of the most unique and grand open TVs ever. Although Beovision Harmony does not completely hide the TV at off, Beovision Harmony can still become a fancy decoration for the interior of the house.

Earlier this year, LG also launched a unique TV prototype, which can be rolled into a box when users do not use it or open up like a normal TV with the click of a button.

The Beovision Harmony is priced at $ 20,100 (VND 471 million) and will be sold in September this year.

You finished reading the article "Watch the speaker TV open like a butterfly, costing $ 20,100" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.