

What gadgets made the storm in the 90s, but no one is using it today?

Believe me, 90% of the items below will remind you of that 'childhood'

The 1990s were probably the hard times for technology in general. However, it is also the period of blooming of hundreds of creative gadgets (technological parts) to satisfy consumers' tastes. To relive the glorious past, let's explore the most popular gadgets this decade, the decade when the World Wide Web began to change our lives comprehensively.

GAME MACHINE

Early 16-bit games

Let's recall the legendary games we 'crushed': Mario, Contra, Sonic, Chip and Dale, Duck Shoot. I have to say never be bored.

When the tape cassette fails, just take the chips off and use them to play.

Nokia N-Gage

The N-gage (derived from engage: commitment) is a gaming console with Nokia phones, running on the original Series 60 of Symbian OS v6.1. This is a great phone to play video games and also the ultimate audio recording device. Of course, it also follows Nokia's tradition of cattle, from shells to batteries.

Game Boy

Childhood is here. Before the era when you were autistic with your phone, this Japanese 8-bit blockbuster was exactly what every kid plugged into.

PHONE

1. Motorazr

The first 'slim' phone was released to the market, back when Motorola was guaranteed to attract countless gazes. The sleek design, beautiful silver color, and most importantly, a folding mobile phone, Motorola was clearly Motorola's best mobile phone to date.

Sony Ericsson Walkman Series

The Walkman phone series obviously comes in many different models, but the key selling tip here is clearly the sound quality, and the intimate connection to the Walkman brand.

Nokia phone

Nokia N series

It can be said that the N-series has revolutionized the phone industry, for those who want to own a feature-rich phone instead of just a decoration. N-series is even known for playing games, but it is also filled with other features like music, photos, video, sending and receiving data, and of course internet support.

NOKIA
Connecting People
3310

Needless to say about it, the legendary cricket entered the meme world because the level of diamond 'bulls' also had to surrender and the atom bomb could not be destroyed.

Falls to the floor

Break the screen

Falls to the floor

Break the floor

Iphone: Falling on the floor, broken screen

Nokia: Falling on the floor, broken floor

MUSIC

Mini Disc player

These at launch look like toys . fantasies from the future to the public. Yet their fate only existed for a few years before the advent of the iPod and swept the music-consuming industry.

Portable Mp3 CD player

A bargain for those who have little budgets for music. Not only has a stylish appearance, you are also free to adjust your music list, with the number of songs in the crisis at that time: 100+. They exist until other types of Mp3 players finally catch up with that price.

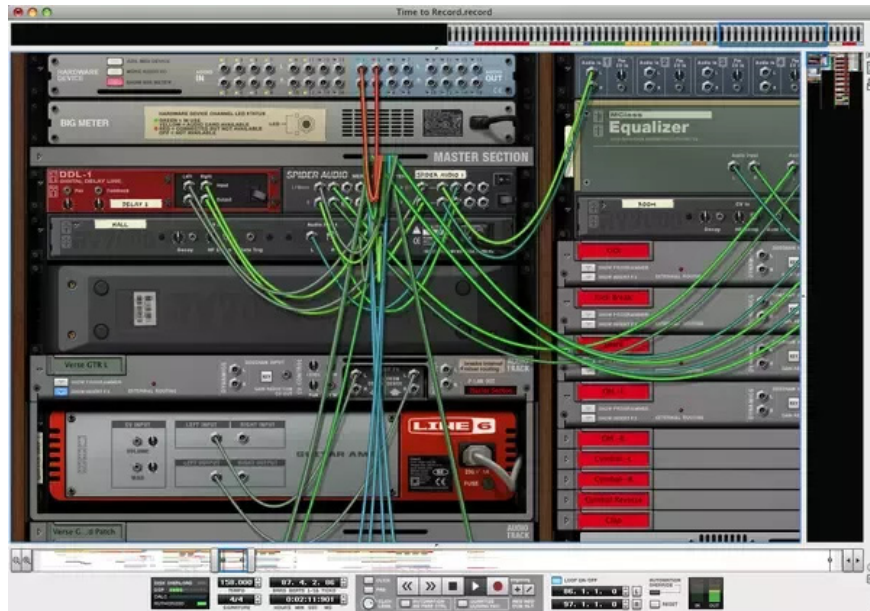

Music player

Extremely expensive, extremely admirable. We used to visit music stores just to see these things. Their prices were too out of reach for most crowds at the time

£ 20,000

£ 23900

SOME OTHER ITEMS

VHS / Cassette rewind

This extra accessory makes it easy and smooth to rewind the tape. With it, you do not need to hear the physical noises of this stage, just sit comfortably on the sofa and let it do magic.

Camera immediately taken

These cameras are now obsolete with the digital age. However, it was an extremely advanced technology at the time of launch, perhaps because it was the only thing that allowed you to take a picture and print it out in the blink of an eye!

References: Quora

Top 10 Gadget weird and failed

You finished reading the article "What gadgets made the storm in the 90s, but no one is using it today?" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.