Scientists performed experiments that simulated what happened when the human body received a bullet at 1200km / h on a pig's lap. And see what terrible thing will happen.

What happens when you shoot a bullet at a pork thigh?

The bullet through the pig's thigh is "sweet" but that's not all that happens inside the body when the bullet pierces.

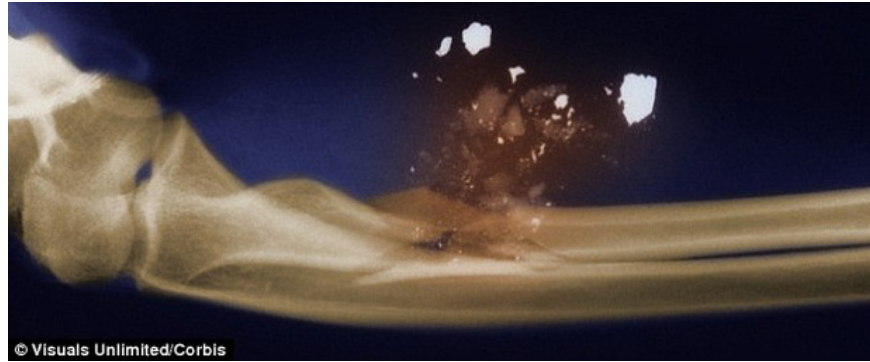

For greater certainty, scientists continue to perform the experiment but this time, they used ballistics gel - a transparent gel with a similar texture to human muscles instead of using the thighs. pig.

We can see, the bullet not only creates a hole in the body but with a terrible spin, the energy it creates causes the initial hole to hatch and shrink quickly.

This fast-moving energy source is one of the reasons why watermelons explode when hit.

With time taking only a few parts of a second, the bullet caused a terrible impact on the body, surrounding tissues and damaged nerves, torn blood vessels, broken muscles. This makes the wounds caused by bullets often lose a lot of blood.

The worst situation if hit is a bullet hitting the bone and changing direction right in the body. At that time, the consequences are more serious than the terrible things we just mentioned a lot.
