

Why does the text 'The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog' often appear when you install the font?

Why is not any other word but is this text appearing? Let's find out through the article below.

Designer and those who install fonts must be familiar with the words 'The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog'. But do you know why it is not any other text, but is this text appearing? Let's find out through the article below.

In English, the word "quick brown fox jumps" over the lazy dog ??is a pangram - a sentence, a phrase that contains all 26 alphabetical characters in the alphabet. If you want to touch-typing, try a typewriter, try a computer keyboard, . or try any application that needs to use all the letters in the English alphabet, people often choose to type The phrase is both concise and concise.

In English, "The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog" is still some other pangrams, but this phrase is used by most people because it is simple and easy to remember.

On February 10, 1885, the Boston Journal first used and published the phrase "The Quick Dog Over the Lazy Dog" in the morning newspaper with the introduction that this is a sentence that contains all the words in the alphabet. what teachers use for writing students on typewriters.

When typewriters became popular tools in the late 19th century, this phrase often appeared as an exercise on keystroke books. And by the 20th century, more and more people knew this phrase.

On January 10, 1903, Pitman's Phonetic Journal in one of his articles suggested that this sentence was the most widely used alphabetical sentence.

This sentence is also used in the first message via Moscow – Washington hotline, the official computer channel between the US and the Russian Federation to test & test the system. During the experiment, the Russian translator replied and asked the American side about the meaning of the text. Specifically, the response clearly states 'What does it mean when your people say 'Missing the dog over the lazy dog?' ' (Roughly translated: American side you say 'The brown fox jumps over a lazy dog') What attention?)

In the 20th century, this verse was also used by technicians to test the typewriter system or telegram.

Today, this sentence is still often used to test the visibility of sample fonts or try a computer keyboard.

Some pangrams in English:

1. Waltz, bad nymph, for quick jigs vex.
2. Quick zephyrs blow, vexing daft Jim.
3. Sphinx of black quartz, judge my vow.
4. Two driven jocks help fax my big quiz.
5. Five quacking zephyrs jolt my wax bed.
6. The five boxing wizards jump quickly.
7. Pack my box with five dozen liquor jugs.
8. The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog.
9. Jinxed wizards pluck ivy from the big quilt.
10. Crazy Fredrick bought many very exquisite opal jewels.
11. We promptly judged antique ivory buckles for the next prize.

12. A mad boxer shot a quick, gloved jab to the jaw of his dizzy opponent.

13. Jaded zombies acted by quaintly but kept driving their oxen forward.

14. The extra job requires pluck and zeal from every young earner.

You finished reading the article "Why does the text 'The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog' often appear when you install the font?" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.