Recently, Carrascos, a family company with more than 40 years of computer manufacturing in Peru, has launched a special laptop called Wawa, designed with a durable wooden case that can survive at least 10 -15 years.

In the era of technological development, computer manufacturing companies often launch new products and encourage users to upgrade and upgrade new devices each year. Recently, however, Carrascos, a family company with more than 40 years of computer manufacturing in Peru, has launched a special laptop called Wawa, designed with a durable wooden case that can survive a little. most from 10-15 years.

Wawa laptop is super light weight with a wooden case, convenient for moving.

In particular, the machine is removable to repair and upgrade as needed. Instead of disposing of and buying new equipment, users simply need to replace the old board and continue using it. This is the reason why the life of the machine is significantly higher than other machines on the market.

This special laptop is very affordable, about 235 USD (about 5.4 million). Users will have to pay an additional 35USD (about 810 thousand dong) to own an upgraded version of this machine.

Carrascos first launched Wawa in 2015, but until now the company has released version 2.0 with a stronger innovation in wrap and recyclable materials. Wawa runs the Linux operating system, supported by normal charging and also by solar.

Carrasco said it wants users to be creative with Wawa and upgrade products as needed. Of course, to do this, users must undergo a training course. Carrasco hopes their laptop will be used for a long time, it can be used by users when they are students in grades 3 or 4 until going to college, just upgrade the configuration is done.

Wawa not only has an attractive price, easy access to children in remote areas but also helps reduce the amount of waste from electronic products, contributing to environmental protection.
