

Wooden sculptures, bizarre ancient tombs are found in Peru

Add a discovery of newly discovered archaeological relics in Peru that surprised international archaeologists.

Add a discovery of newly discovered archaeological relics in Peru that surprised international archaeologists.

Accordingly, archaeologists working at the location of Chan Chan ancient city in Peru announced on September 28 that they have found 4 wooden sculptures and a strange ancient tomb.

Archaeologists say these wooden statues are about 70 centimeters (27.6 inches) long and the first part has a strange mysterious mask.

In addition, there is a bone of a man in the grave holding a landmark with a breast height.

Current archaeological circles continue to survey as well as further in-depth analysis of these new artifacts and relics.

It is known that Chan Chan is a UNESCO world heritage site located on the northern coast of Peru near the city of Trujillo today.

Historically, Chan Chan was the capital of the Kingdom of Chimu and flourished in the 15th century before being invaded by the Incas.

Watch video:

You finished reading the article "Wooden sculptures, bizarre ancient tombs are found in Peru" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
