

You already know how to ask Google how the pig screams?

Google has just released a new feature that complements the cries of 19 types of animals in the Google Search search engine.

Do you know how the cries of the turkey or the head whale curve? Google will help you identify the sounds of different animals with the newly updated feature

"Animal sounds" or "Animal noises" are the two main keywords to activate Google's latest feature , look up the sounds of 19 animal types . The manufacturer has added the Google Search search toolbar to the typical cry of many different animals, including monkeys, cats, cows, ducks, elephants, horses, lions, deer, owls, pigs and bears. Structure, chicken, sheep, tiger, turkey, turtle, Bowhead whale, humpback whales, wolf and zebra.

Each animal is accompanied by illustrations, especially the English vocabulary for each animal type and their cry. For example, we have a turkey with Turkey's name and a characteristic cry "Gobble Gobble". Not only do you have more knowledge about the cries of some animals, but you also pocket some English words thanks to this fun feature.

After entering "Animal sounds" or "Animal noises" on the search bar, images of each animal type will appear. Just click on the speaker icon in each animal, you can hear their cries.

1. https://www.google.com/?gws_rd=ssl#q=animal+noises

Note, to use this feature you need to adjust Google language to English in the settings. If you can't activate the feature on Chrome, you can change it to Edge or Firefox

You finished reading the article "You already know how to ask Google how the pig screams?" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
