

YouTube deletes the famous musician's channel because of suspicion that it has directed the songs that he composed

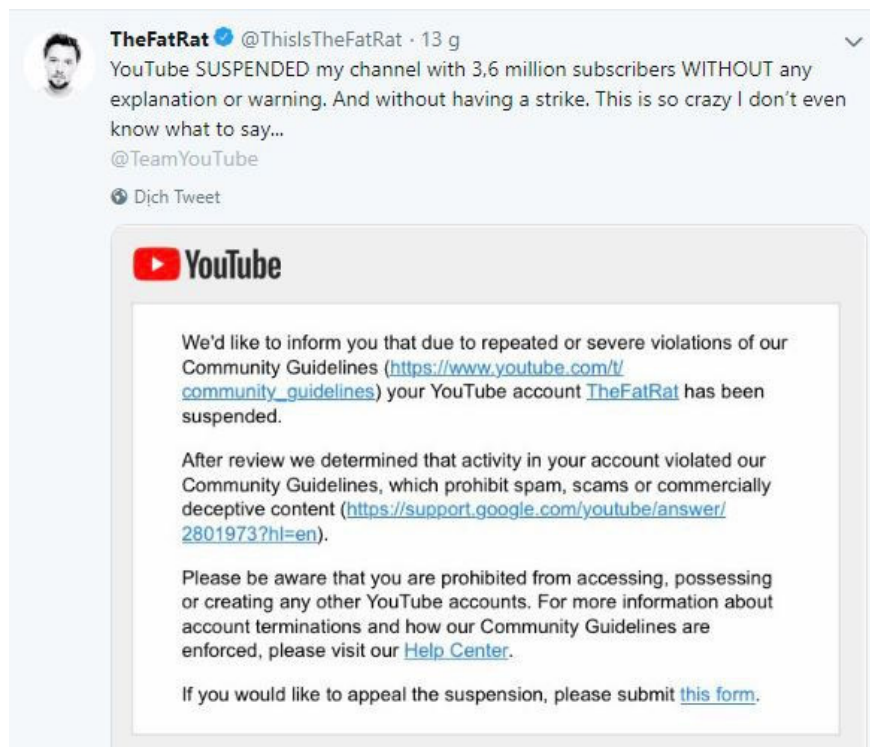

YouTube has made people indignant when the main musicians cheat and steal music rights from songs composed by themselves.

Recently, content creators on YouTube and the user community were frightened when TheFatRat's channel along with all the accompanying music videos were wiped clean.

TheFatRat is the YouTube channel of the famous and respected German musician in the music industry, Friedrich Johannes Büttner, with 3.6 million subscribers and over 700 million views. TheFatRat allows users to use their music for free on YouTube.

When fans visit any of the videos on this channel, they receive a message: "This video is no longer available because the YouTube account associated with this video has been terminated." When accessing a YouTube channel or account, the message "This channel does not exist" or "This account is terminated due to a violation of YouTube's policy of fraudulent behavior and misleading content .".

TheFatRat's furious announcement on Twitter as well as personal Facebook before announcing a channel suspension from YouTube.

Prior to announcing channel suspension from YouTube, TheFatRat was very angry and indignant. He said YouTube has suspended its channel without any explanation or warning.

A lot of famous users and YouTuber and some music industry figures have expressed their support for TheFatRat on various social media.

This is not the first time YouTube has caused trouble for TheFatRat. In December 2018, TheFatRat was warned by the platform that users had accused him of illegally using songs created by himself.

Obviously, YouTube has made people angry when the musicians cheat and steal music from their own songs. After that, TheFatRat's YouTube channel was restored by the system after nearly 1 day of termination.

Confusion from YouTube's algorithm makes other content creators on the platform to be shy about YouTube's management, most likely to fall victim to false copyright infringement reports themselves. from an anonymous account.
